Field of the Invention This invention relates to a dry etching method of, for example, SiO_2 used in a film such as a SiO_2 insulating film in a semiconductor device or a micromachine. 2. Description of the Related Art Dry etching is indispensable for the formation of an insulating film used in a film such as a SiO_2 insulating film in a semiconductor device or a micromachine. The SiO_2 insulating film, for example, is formed using a CVD method or a PVD method. A polishing method of performing chemical etching in the step of dry etching is also used. The processes of forming a thin film are performed in many steps in the manufacture of the SiO_2 insulating film. Recently, to improve the properties of the SiO_2 insulating film used in semiconductor devices, the use of a film containing a small amount of impurities, an optimum composition of the film, etc. is under investigation. As a result, the development of the dry etching technique which can be used to etch the films at high selectivity has been advanced. A dry etching method of wet etching an SiO_2 insulating film by hydrogen fluoride (HF) with high selectivity is known as the above-mentioned dry etching method. In the prior art, however, the selectivity between the SiO_2 insulating film and the underlying film (mask) is sometimes low. In other words, the process margin in the above-mentioned HF method is low. To improve the selectivity between the SiO.sub.2 insulating film and the underlying film, various dry etching methods have been studied. As an example, the use of the so-called reactive gas in combination with a noble gas is known. The use of the reactive gas in combination with the noble gas reduces a corrosive gas and thereby the selectivity can be improved. Further, the use of the so-called reaction gas in combination with the noble gas reduces the influence of the sputter gas,
